

Yorbis Romero Serrano
Beaverton High School
Beginning ESL
Entered the United States in October 2014

HUMAN RIGHTS

In my country there are no human rights. All the presidents have promised to help the people and only one accomplished what he promised. The police treat colored people really bad just because they have a different race. Indians are not treated equally; police don't respect them. The police take away people's money and the people are scared to go out to the street because of the delinquency and because they might get in trouble with the police. Meanwhile the presidents don't do anything to solve the country's problems. The people that have money take advantage of the others that are poor. Rich people make poor people to work and pay them too little money; that's why the majority of young people get involved in drug dealing and gangs because they just want to survive the poverty and help their family. I would like that there could be more jobs in my country and that people could all be treated equally. They should be able to get a good salary so they can feed their families and not get involved in bad things. The presidents should help the people by giving them jobs and giving them the opportunity to progress.

